ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR LATIN AMERICA
Tenth Session
Mar del Plata, Argentina, May 1963

PROVISIONAL ANNOTATED AGENDA

1. Opening addresses

The programme of proceedings and opening addresses will be made known in the Order of the Day for the opening meeting.

2. Election of Officers

Rule 16 of the Rules of Procedure provides that "the Commission shall, at the commencement of each session, elect from among the representatives a Chairman, two Vice-Chairmen and a Rapporteur, who shall hold office until their successors are elected. They shall be eligible for re-election".

3. Adoption of the agenda

The provisional agenda (E/CN.12/655) was sent to Member Governments, together with a letter of invitation to the present session, after consultation with the Chairman of the Commission, as stipulated in the Rules of Procedure. The Commission may amend the agenda or include additional items. Amendments may also be introduced at any time during the session.

4. The present status of the Latin American economy

This item, which will be considered at plenary meetings, will afford an opportunity for general discussion on the present status of the Latin American economy. To facilitate the proceedings, the secretariat has presented a brief analysis of the most important events which took place in 1962. Similarly, the latest issues of the Economic Bulletin for Latin /America and

America and its Statistical Supplement contain articles of topical interest, together with the most recent figures and data on various sectors of the economy.

5. Economic and social development of Latin America

The review of major trends in the economy of the region for which the sessions of the Commission generally provide an opportunity acquires special importance on the present occasion, in view of the persistent slackening in the rate of expansion of the Latin American economies and the aggravation of problems of various kinds. At the same time, possibilities and prospects have been opened up which must be exploited to the utmost in order to overcome the trend towards stagnation and to recover and surpass earlier rates of economic and social development.

These problems and prospects make it advisable that advantage be taken of the present session to attempt an over-all evaluation of the experience gained during the post-war period, with a view to contributing to the establishment of basic guidelines for future development policy. This need has largely determined the nature of the relevant documents which the secretariat is presenting for consideration by the Commission, and which, moreover, include a considerable number of studies on various social aspects of development.

6. Progress of planning in Latin America

Most of the Latin American countries have been devoting considerable effort to the planning of their economic and social development. To these activities the secretariat has contributed in some cases directly, through the Advisory Groups programme - for which the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning is now responsible -, and in others indirectly, through its general and methodological research.

The tenth session of the Commission offers an opportunity to make a searching examination of the experience acquired, analyse the progress achieved and define the principal problems at present confronting the region. Discussion of this kind is essential, both on account of the importance attached to this subject and because planning should represent a permanent process rather than a sporadic effort. The establishment of the central mechanisms and the formulation of the preliminary plans constitute only the initial phase of this process, which will have to be improved upon and extended to the stages of implementation and supervision. Moreover, the topics to be discussed include aspects of the question that have not yet been fully elucidated, but in relation to which practical action itself urgently calls for a clearly defined guidance.

<sup>1/</sup> Adds.1, 2, 3 and 4 will be available in Spanish only.

The documents presented by the secretariat, while they may contribute to the evaluation of the progress achieved and the assessment of current problems, incorporate the results of new efforts in the methodological field, as well as the findings of several international seminars and meetings, together with suggestions and improvements relating to statistical data.

The discussions and recommendations of the Commission may be of special importance for future activities where international technical assistance in the field of planning is concerned.

7. Trade policy and the economic integration of Latin America

The consideration of this item will be concentrated on the following aspects:

(a) Trade relations with other regions of the world

The unfavourable course taken by Latin America's external trade, and its marked effect in reducing the region's economic growth rate, make it advisable to devote special attention to the problems of Latin America's trade relations with the rest of the world. The documents submitted by the secretariat on this subject include, among other matters, an analysis of recent developments and trends in trade with the member countries of the European Economic Community, and places special emphasis on the need for an effective co-ordination of Latin America's trade policy.

/(b) ECLA's

(b) ECLA's participation in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

This meeting, which is to take place not later than the beginning of 1964, will provide an exceptional opportunity for the less developed countries to put before an international forum the basic problems of their trade relations, including those touching on terms of trade, the difficulties of developing new export lines - mainly in manufactured and semi-manufactured goods - and the limitations inherent in the traditional patterns of specialization in international trade. The Commission's debates on this subject can both lay the ground for Latin American participation in this conference, and furnish valuable indications that will enable the secretariat to provide the co-operation it has been asked to give in the preparatory work of the conference.

(c) Economic integration of Latin America

The documentation submitted by the secretariat on this subject is intended to facilitate the Commission's examination of the programmes and prospects for regional economic integration, in the light of the progress achieved by the Latin American Free Trade Association, the pace at which integration aims are being fulfilled, and the measures that may be found desirable in order to increase this pace.

8. The Central American Economic Integration Programme

With the recent accession of Costa Rica to the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration and other Central American instruments, Central American regional integration has now attained its full regional scope, and highly satisfactory progress has been achieved. This item of the agenda will provide an opportunity to examine the progress achieved by the Central American common market and the work done by the regional agencies concerned with financing, industrial technology and raising the level of administration in the countries of the region.

9. Industrial development of Latin America

Since the last session of the Committee of the Whole, the secretariat has completed a whole range of studies, many of which were submitted for discussion at the Seminar on Industrial Programming held recently at São Paulo, a report on which is being submitted to the tenth session of ECLA in a separate document.

Consideration of this item of the agenda by the Commission will be divided into the two following sub-items:

(a) Industrial development: present situation and future prospects

This consists of an over-all study of the main trends and problems of industrialization, summarizing and evaluating experience during the post-war years, with a view to laying down fundamental guidelines for future policy in the industrial development of Latin America. The documentation submitted by the secretariat will underline, in addition to considerations of an over-all nature, the importance of technological research for the region's industrial development; it will also provide some background information on such essential technical and economic questions as economies of scale in industrial programming and their consequences in relation to national development and to Latin American economic integration.

(b) Problems of the main industrial sectors

The documents presented by the secretariat include an examination of the present characteristics and future prospects of demand and the possibilities of satisfying it, special problems of productivity and re-equipment, and possibilities of regional trade and export to other areas, etc. in a number of vital industrial sectors that include the manufacture of heavy equipment and machine-tools, the chemical industry, forest products, and the pulp and paper and textile industries.

10. Economic problems of agriculture

In common with other salient questions on the agenda, the Commission's discussion of this topic is expected to focus on an evaluation of agricultural development in the post-war period and an examination of the main problems in the agricultural sector - including those of an institutional nature - with a view to determining the essential criteria for defining a development policy to remedy the extremely backward state of Latin American agriculture in general.

The secretariat submits to the Commission for its consideration a document that is specifically intended to be used as a working paper for a discussion along these lines. A report on livestock in Brazil is also presented as part of the series of studies on livestock in various Latin American countries.

Moreover, within the scope of the general debate on the problems and prospects of agriculture in Latin America, the Commission's discussions might also help to specify the ways in which the Latin American countries can participate in the World Food Programme.

11. Natural resources and electric power

The increasing need to promote the diversification of the Latin American economies and the requirements resulting from the aim of expediting economic development and substantially improving the living conditions of the Latin American peoples underline the importance of a broader knowledge and a better assessment of the region's natural resources. Moreover, the planning activities which are being undertaken have given further proof that information on these vital matters is still fragmentary and incomplete. Hence, a particularly significant contribution might be made by the Commission's discussions with respect to ways and means of improving the present situation.

/As a

As a basis for an examination of this kind, the secretariat submits a preliminary paper in which present knowledge of the region's principal natural resources, the research techniques that might be used to add to that knowledge and the institutions responsible for such work in Latin America, are described in broad outline.

Information is also supplied in other documents on the experience of the Survey groups sent to different countries to study water resources, and an account is given of the conclusions reached at meetings of experts on electric power.

12. Activities in the field of technical assistance

Pursuant to the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations began to decentralize its economic and social activities in the past year, beginning with the regional technical assistance projects. In order to inform the Commission of the present status of the decentralization activities in Latin America, the secretariat is presenting a special note and, as part of the same item on the agenda, is submitting an information paper prepared by the Technical Assistance Board on its activities in Latin America financed by the Regular and Expanded Programmes.

In this connexion, the Secretary-General has submitted detailed projects to the Economic and Social Council, particularly with respect to the expansion of trade for the less developed countries, the planning of national development, industrial development, and the application of science and technology in solving the problems of the less developed countries making full use of natural resources and improving housing conditions.
