ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROBLEMS

Agricultural improvement in Latin America

Draft resolution approved by the Drafting Committee on Technical Assistance

THE ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR LATIN AMERICA, HAVING CONSIDERED the section of the Economic Survey of Latin America 1950 (E/CN.12/217) dealing with agriculture;
CONSIDERING that during the agricultural year 1949-1950
the per capita quantum of production of the region's principal crops was only 87 per cent of the pre-war levels and that no progress is to be reported in the majority of countries in the ratio between the total area harvested and the population;
CONSIDERING that although some progress in agricultural production over the pre-war period can be noted, this progress is still very slow as a result of the fact, which is still to be observed, that greater attention was paid during the war to other sectors of the economy;

/CONSIDERING
E/CN.12/AC.12/10

CONSIDERING that it is important that the agricultural development of the region should be stimulated by devoting the greatest possible attention to it and by making available to it modern technical skills in order to obviate any lack of balance with the growing industrialization to be observed in Latin America.

CONSIDERING that industrial development tends to increase the urban population which, since it earns more, increases the pressure of demand, and that this demand, if it is not satisfied by greater production, not only causes a rise in prices -- as has occurred in many countries -- but also creates an atmosphere in which social disturbances might be engendered;

CONSIDERING that standards for general application cannot be recommended because the factors affecting agricultural and stock raising development are multiple and vary from one country to another, in accordance with their specific regional characteristics;

CONSIDERING that it is a primary and immediately essential obligation to supply the people with food; and

CONSIDERING that the Governments of Member States should pay more attention to agricultural problems and to all those factors which exercise a direct and decisive influence upon the improvement of agriculture;

1. TAKES NOTE of the section of the Economic Survey of Latin America 1950 (E/CN.12/217) dealing with agriculture;
2. RECOMMENDS to the Member Governments to take in the technical field the following measures, inter alia:

- a) To perfect the methods of professional training of agronomists, who are responsible for applying technical knowledge to farming;
- b) To make a soil survey of the country in order to obtain full knowledge of its soils and thus to be in a position to decide what they are fit for in accordance with their dominant characteristics, without which, programmes of improvement, studies of production targets and similar subjects become meaningless;
- c) To co-operate with existing or projected experimental stations;
- d) To expand and improve State agricultural extension services;
- e) To create soil and water conservation services;
- f) To expand entomological and botanical plant treatment services and enact plant health legislation to make them function effectively, and drastically, if necessary, in the general interests of the country;
- g) To encourage farm mechanization;
- h) To spread knowledge of the correct use of fertilizers and to study the best methods of their rapid transportation within the country at reduced freight rates, so that the farmer may be able to obtain them as cheaply as possible.
- i) To enact legislation to protect the farmer by ensuring /that fertilizers

that fertilizers or preparations he acquires in fact contain the guaranteed minimum content of nutritive elements and that their price is in conformity with the accepted values of plant foods;

- j) To stimulate irrigation and communications; and
- k) To give technical and economic assistance to stock raising generally.

3. RECOMMENDS to the Governments of Member States that they should study the serious problem of tenancy, with a view to obtaining a better utilization of land, bearing in mind resolution 401 (V) of the General Assembly.

4. URGES the Governments of Member States to regulate trading in products of agriculture and stock raising, and their distribution, in order to eliminate intermediaries who serve no social purpose other than that of increasing the price of those products.

5. REQUESTS the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the FAO to grant to Governments of Member States adequate technical assistance for the integrated development of agriculture in the fulfilment of the relevant portions of the foregoing resolutions.

6. RECOMMENDS to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development that it should pay effective and timely attention to agricultural development projects.
