INTRODUCTION

There is no doubt that the progressive integration of the English-speaking countries of the Caribbean, initiated by the Caribbean Free Trade Association (CARIFTA) and intensified by the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) has gathered momentum, and has entered a phase of irreversible trend to the point of contemplating the widening of the process to embrace other Caribbean countries.

It is also a fact that the Governments engaged in these endeavours, unanimously agree in principle that there could not be any significant, sound and viable economic and social development of the area, in the long run, without active participation and co-operation of all the economies concerned in such effort. Because of their relatively small individual size and population, the countries and territories of the Caribbean characterized, among other things, by a narrow range in resource base, institutions and skilled manpower, a high dependency on foreign trade, a limited local market and diseconomies of small scale, would have to associate themselves in many respects, if they want to survive in this highly competitive world of powerful economic groupings.

Moreover, as agriculture is in general the most important economic sector throughout the Caribbean, it is recognized that no serious effort at development could likely succeed unless due regard is paid to the importance and adequate participation of this sector. The Agricultural Marketing Protocol (AMP) as a special instrument of CARIFTA and CARICOM for generating trade in agricultural produce and for benefitting the Less Developed Countries of the Area (LDC's), the efforts displayed in trying to establish within the CARICOM a general Food Plan for the zone, and within this the creation of a Regional Food Corporation bear witness to this special interest.

The recent creation of the Committee of Development and Co-operation of the Caribbean (CDCC)^{1/}, adds a new dimension to the field of co-operation in the Caribbean, elevating it to a level that transcends the geographical scope of existing institutions in that area. Its work programme brings the problems into sharper relief and makes more urgent the action that needs to be taken on the priorities. The Ministers of the independent countries^{2/} of the Caribbean at the inaugural session of the CDCC, while reaffirming "the necessity to strengthen the unity and co-operation" among the countries of the Caribbean specially, and with economic groupings of Latin America for joint policies and actions in social and economic development, have declared their political will and taken very important resolutions among which the sixth resolution which reads as follows:

"Co-operate in the field of Agriculture, in order to accelerate the development and use of appropriate and efficient techniques in this sector in the Caribbean countries and formulate joint policies promoting the agricultural complementation of the countries of the sub-region".

But one of the limiting factors for the development and stimulation of this desired collaboration is lack of communication at all levels, within which has to be included the inexistence or insufficiency of trade links, and to a less extent the language barrier.

^{1/} CDCC established in conformity with resolution 358(XVI) of the Economic Commission for Latin America, Port of Spain, Trinidad, May 1975.

^{2/} Representatives of member countries of the Committee: Commonwealth of the Bahamas, Barbados, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Grenada, Guyana, Haiti, Jamaica and Trinidad and Tobago.

Attended also the inaugural meeting of the CDCC in Havana, Cuba, last November 1975, in the capacity of observer: representatives of Belize, the West Indies Associated States as Associate Members of ECLA and the Netherlands Antilles.

However, throughout the Caribbean numerous associations of agricultural producers and dealers in agricultural products have been formed and developed without in most cases any virtual link between themselves or in complete ignorance of the mere existence of similar organizations in neighbouring countries, even engaged in the same line of activities.

The Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) Office for the Caribbean, based in Port of Spain and mandated to act as the Secretariat of the CDCC, with this perspective in mind and aware of the seriousness of this problem has taken the initiative of preparing an inventory of existing and active associations of producers and dealers in agricultural commodities. As a result of a mail survey in the CARICOM countries, whose response proved satisfactory, the present preliminary Directory has been prepared and issued as a modest contribution to the task of "bringing together of associations of producers-exporters for the sharing of experiences and promotion of reciprocal co-operation in the various aspects of the marketing of agricultural products without discounting the possibility of exporting as a group to third countries". This is only a first step, for the hope of the ECLA Office for the Caribbean is to be able to complete this information for the countries already included in the Directory and to extend it to the other CDCC countries to assure complete coverage. To this end is attached to the Directory model of the same questionnaire that was used for the preliminary survey with the view that associations that were overlooked in the preliminary survey could fill in one and return it to the Office at the address indicated in the same schedule.

This publication is distributed to all the associations listed in the Directory with the aim that it will stimulate the development of contacts, exchange information, experience and mutual aid and finally, within the framework of regional co-operation, develop avenues of joint activities, including trade, organization of regional production and industrial processing of crops and identification of new areas of co-operation.
