UN reform Regional Consultation for Latin American and the Caribbean, 25-26 July, 2006 (Delivered to the UN Secretary General's High Level Coherence Panel on UN Reform Regional Consultation for Latin America and the Caribbean).

Abstract: Highlights the centrality of the lives of women to national and international issues of development, security, and human rights. Discusses the potential for the dominant economic model to undermine human development. Asserts the need for reform and strengthening of the UN architecture so that there is systemwide competence and responsibility for ensuring gender equality and women's human rights within all its programmes. Opposes the argument for the dissolution of UNIFEM. Reaffirms the need for continued collaboration between regional women's organisations and UNIFEM.

Human trafficking in the context of Caribbean labor migration.
Abstract:
Define trafficking as essentially the recruitment, movement and employment of persons conducted outside of the formal systems, which involves practices that are illegal. Outlines commonalities among the situations which may lead to persons' involvement in trafficking. Evaluates trafficking within the context of migration, discussing the purpose, directions and methods of movement; activities, conditions, potential conflict and duration of stay at destinations; and the legal framework for trafficking. Discusses trafficking of persons within CARICOM in the context of CSME and makes police recommendations for the reduction of vulnerability to being trafficked and the punishment of perpetrators of trafficking.

Gender, trade liberalization and CARICOM Single Market and Economy: challenges and options for civil society.
Abstract: Provides and overview of some of the important features of the current conjuncture which demonstrates the interconnectedness between the global and hemispheric trade regimes, the evolving CSME and the gendered realities of the people. Uses a 2003 UNDP study to illustrate some of the gender issues facing civil society in the CARICOM region. Presents a case study of Jamaica, outlining the nation's progress in gender-mainstreaming, discussing the lack of corresponding social and economic advancement for the majority of women, and suggesting possible reasons for this. Asserts the need for a gender approach to the crafting of the CSME. Discusses the work of civil society organisation and their challenges faced.

Abstract:
Presents a collection of practices taken in 15 countries worldwide that advance gendered resilience building, particularly as it relates to the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action. Describes the different roles played by women from disaster-prone communities, including constructing disaster resistant housing; increasing food security; disseminating information; upgrading livelihoods; and negotiating claims to rights and resources. Documents the impacts and results, lessons learned, challenges faced, and potential for replication of each initiative undertaken. Highlights the potential for disaster recovery and rehabilitation to provide opportunities for women to empower themselves and their communities, and asserts the needs for a gender-balanced approach to disaster risk reduction.

Abstract:

Examines the connections between gender, nutrition and poverty in the English-speaking Caribbean. Discusses the situation of poverty in the region and the limited progress made in addressing poverty within recent times. Presents the rationale for the application of a gender perspective to analyzing poverty. Examines the status of women in the region with respect to poverty, employment and their status in the household, and asserts the centrality of the empowerment of women to the elimination of poverty. Discusses the impact of gender differentials on the nutritional status of children, and provides an overview of recent trends in the region with regard to obesity, stunting, and undernourishment. Makes recommendations to governments and regional bodies for a gender analysis of public policies relative to poverty, food security and health.

Abstract:
Observes that the family home is a critical site for the performance, development of gender identities. Asserts that issues of power, decision-making, equality, empowerment, equity, and human rights are as important in the home as in public spheres. Locates the issue of gender within the Caribbean political and economic reality in the context of globalisation. Identifies numerous features of the Caribbean reality that complicate the task of promoting and securing gender equity including the gap between ideological and material gender relations, divisions among women along class and racial/ethnic lines, and the male backlash. Examines the situation of women's participation in political decision-making in the CARICOM and identifies factors impeding women's advancement.

LC/G.2303(SES.31/11).

Abstract:

International migration has been a constant factor in the history of the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean. From colonization and independence to the mid-twentieth century, the region received overseas immigrants from Africa and Asia whose presence is particularly significant in a number of countries and has had a considerable influence on them. This trend's reversal by the current globalization process poses many challenges and opportunities.

Abstract: Locates Hispanic women at the vanguard of popular resistance against dictatorship and military rule in Hispanic societies. Theorises that women as symbols of national resistance can become springboards for overcoming barriers to female participation in countries traditionally reticent to accept a feminist agenda. Provides a historical background of the Mirabel sisters, political activists of the Dominican Republic who were assassinated by the dictator Rafael Leonidas Trujillo. Discusses Trujillo's relationship to women in general and Minerva Mirabal in particular, and provides an overview of the Cuban Revolution and the 14th of June Movement. Assesses the impact of the Mirabal Sisters on women's participation in the Dominican Republic and their legacy today.

Gender and social inclusion: social policy perspectives from Latin America and the Caribbean.
Abstract:
It analyzes some of the basic building block for social inclusion policies in Latin America and the Caribbean (LAC). It distinguishes 3 levels of interventions to advance social inclusion: (1) constitutional frameworks and national policies, (2) institutional arrangements, and (3) pro-active programs to counter specific forms of exclusion. It examines firstly the necessity to insure constitutional and legal protections for group rights, such as international and national anti-discrimination laws. Secondly, the experiences of LAC with government ministries or offices created to promote women's empowerment. Finally, the paper examines three sets of public policies in affirmative action, education and labor markets to promote inclusion, with emphasis on gender.

"From Nielsen Estate to Africa House": Education and male/female relations in rural Woodside Jamaica.
In: Caribbean Quarterly Mona : UWI, vol.52, Nos. 2 & 3, pp. 156-171
Abstract:
Addressed the relationship between development and gender relations in rural community of Woodside, Jamaica which formed part of the Nielsen coffee estate during slavery. Discusses the efficacy of several Woodside community initiatives such as the Woodside Community Development Action Group, an Educo-tourism program, an indigenous Emancipation celebration, an Emancipation Summer School, and the You/We Shared Learning Institutes. Provides an analysis, through anecdotal stories, of the dynamics between community members, within community organisations, as well as between residents and visitors, and explores how such dynamics relate to the community’s struggle towards self-sustaining cultural and economic development.

Inequalities in children’s schooling: AIDS, orphanhood, poverty and gender.

Abstract:
Situated the study within the context of the worldwide AIDS pandemic which results in elevated levels of orphans and displaced children from high adult mortality. Briefly and selectively reviews the literature that assesses the impact of orphan status on schooling. Describes the datasets and defines the key variables, based on data gathered on 51 countries included on the basis of data availability. Presents findings on four questions: (1) How prevalent are orphans and with whom do they live? (2) Are orphans more likely to be poor? (3) Conditional on their economic status, are orphans less likely to be enrolled in school? (4) To the extent there is a gender gap, is it greater for orphans? Summarises the results and identifies some key policies and research issues.

Sex worker migration and human trafficking: problems and possibilities.

Abstract:
Discusses the connection between the trafficking of persons, and prostitution other types of sex work in the Caribbean context. Describes the main characteristics of migrant sex work in the region, asserting that migration into work within the sex trade in the region is part of Caribbean women's livelihood strategies, which are informed by historical patterns of work and survival in the region. Examines the problems and short-comings of anti-trafficking interventions, cautioning against the implementation of repressive legislation which deepen economic and social divides and increase hostilities. Makes policy recommendations that would allow Caribbean governments to design policies that would promote Caribbean sustainability and contribute to peaceful conditions in the region.

Two steps forward, one step back: dealing with violence against women in Suriname.

Abstract:
Explores the ways in which the women's movement in Suriname borrowed and adapted existing strategies for addressing domestic violence and invented new strategies that influenced the wider Caribbean region. Identifies the initiatives leading to and the impetus for the establishment by CAFRA-Suriname of the Domestic Violence Intervention Project. Traces the stages through which the project was undertaken including data collection, involving the media and policy makers, training for Trainers, developing a multi-sector approach, regional training for police and social workers, and evaluation. Assesses the impact of the project identifying continuing challenges.

Violence against women in the Caribbean: an intervention and lessons learned from Jamaica.

Abstract:
Describes the interagency campaign implemented in 1998 that specifically addressed violence against women and girls. Addresses the theoretical perspectives positing an explanation for the occurrence of gender-based violence. Assessed the extent of the gender-based violence problem in the Jamaican context through an overview of some cases of violence against women and girls that received media attention. Provides a summary of the campaign, describing the methods used to gather information, as well as the campaign process and challenges. Documents the lessons learned and key findings from which future initiatives might benefit.

Abstract:

Presents the practice of grassroots women in Jamaica of constructing disaster-resistant housing. Describes the different roles played by women in several communities and by the “Construction Resource for Development Centre” in implementing the initiative, including vulnerability mapping, information gathering, training, and constructing. Examines the impacts and results, lessons learned, challenges faced, and potential for replication of this initiative. Highlights the potential for disaster recovery and rehabilitation to provide opportunities for women to empower themselves and their communities, and asserts the need for a gender-balanced approach to disaster risk reduction.

Abstract:

It analyzes some of the basic building block for social inclusion policies in Latin America and the Caribbean (LAC). It distinguishes 3 levels of interventions to advance social inclusion: (1) constitutional frameworks and national policies, (2) institutional arrangements, and (3) pro-active programs to counter specific forms of exclusion. It examines firstly the necessity to insure constitutional and legal protections for group rights, such as international and national anti-discrimination laws. Secondly, the experiences of LAC with government ministries or offices created to promote women's empowerment. Finally, the paper examines three sets of public policies in affirmative action, education and labor markets to promote inclusion, with emphasis on gender.

Gender and social inclusion: social policy perspectives from Latin America and the Caribbean.
Abstract:
It analyzes some of the basic building block for social inclusion policies in Latin America and the Caribbean (LAC). It distinguishes 3 levels of interventions to advance social inclusion: (1) constitutional frameworks and national policies, (2) institutional arrangements, and (3) pro-active programs to counter specific forms of exclusion. It examines firstly the necessity to insure constitutional and legal protections for group rights, such as international and national anti-discrimination laws. Secondly, the experiences of LAC with government ministries or offices created to promote women's empowerment. Finally, the paper examines three sets of public policies in affirmative action, education and labor markets to promote inclusion, with emphasis on gender.

Bringing the broader context home: gender, human rights and governance in the Caribbean.
In: Caribbean Quarterly Mona: UWI, 2006, vol. 52 Nos. 3 & 4, pp. 51-65
Abstract:
Observes that the family home is a critical site for the performance, development of gender identities. Asserts that issues of power, decision-making, equality, empowerment, equity, and human rights are as important in the home as in public spheres. Locates the issue of gender within the Caribbean political and economic reality in the context of globalisation. Identifies numerous features of the Caribbean reality that complicate the task of promoting and securing gender equity including the gap between ideological and material gender relations, divisions among women along class and racial/ethnic lines, and the male backlash. Examines the situation of women's participation in political decision-making in the CARICOM and identifies factors impeding women's advancement.

Caribbean feminism in transition: an interview with Professor V.E. Barriteau.

Abstract:

Presents the thoughts of Professor Barriteau on the progress of Caribbean women since the colonial times, their contribution to nationalist movements in the region, the current state of Caribbean feminism, and what the future holds for the movement. Barriteau highlights the transitional state of Caribbean women and discusses their ambiguous relationship with their 'mothers' and the overlapping public and private spheres of their lives. She also asserts the need for Caribbean feminism to balance activism with disciplinary studies as women's studies assume greater importance in academia.

Abstract:

Provides a brief overview of recent economic trends as well as a synopsis of the demographic dynamics in the region. Attempts to measure poverty levels based on available data. Outlines the consequences of increased life expectancy and longevity on the demographic structure and discusses the interdependence with the labour market and labour supply. Assesses the degree to which Caribbean countries have recognised these transformations and reflected these changing needs in their social planning strategies and protection policies. Seeks to identify those groups most at risk and makes recommendations for policy changes to government and regional policy and programme planning bodies.

Gender equality in the new millennium: goal or gimmick?.

Abstract:
Provides a critique of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) in comparison to the Beijing Platform for Action (BPA). Discusses the inadequacy of their targets and indicators, their omission of goals relating to violence against women and sexual and reproductive rights, and their silence on the context and institutional environment in which they are to be met. Discusses the specific MDGs that ought to be of primary concern for CARICOM women including poverty eradication and combating the spread of HIV/AIDS. Makes recommendations for the creation of linkages in the Caribbean between the MDGs and the BPA in the context of neoliberalism, religious fundamentalism and the male backlash.

Women's grass-roots organizations in the Dominican Republic: real and imagined female figures

Abstract:
Studies in detail four Dominican women's grass-roots organisations - the Junta Patriótica de Damas, the 14th of June Movement, CONAMUCA, and ADOPEM - and their activism in the twentieth century. Discusses women's involvement in the global struggle for change and empowerment. Emphasises the centrality of women's solidarity to women's resistance. Focuses on the resilience and determination of Caribbean women who have become models and leaders of other women. Directs attention to the reality behind the myths of Caribbean women in art and textual references.

"Where have all the feminists gone": learning the lessons of a long time passed in the women's movement in the Caribbean.
Abstract:
Briefly reviews the feminist movement in the Caribbean focusing on the issues and strategies used by the activists of the 1970s. With a focus on Jamaica, the paper further seeks to assess the extent to which the academy has sufficiently politicised the issues and strategies or identified and implemented new and more relevant agendas. Aims to identify the lessons of this early phase of feminist enterprise in the Caribbean and to determine what contemporary Caribbean feminists must do to reposition Caribbean feminisms as a visible, viable movement.

Between respectability and self-respect: framing Afro-Caribbean women's labour history.
Abstract:
Explores the transitions, institutions and discourses that mediated Anglophone Afro-Caribbean women's labour experiences from the period of slavery to the 1990s, and considers the modes in which they have tended to assert themselves and respond to their circumstances. Examines how Afro-Caribbean women negotiated the race-, class-, and gender-stratified terrain of occupational hierarchy and economic livelihood, within a context of severe structural and ideological constraint. Studies the tensions between the requisites of Euro-creole and middle-class feminine respectability and the determined counter-assertions of subaltern Afro-creole womanist self-respect.

Bringing the broader context home: gender, human rights and governance in the Caribbean.
In: Caribbean Quarterly Mona: UWI, 2006, vol. 52 Nos. 3 & 4, pp. 51-65
Abstract:
Observes that the family home is a critical site for the performance, development of gender identities. Asserts that issues of power, decision-making, equality, empowerment, equity, and human rights are as important in the home as in public spheres. Locates the issue of gender within the Caribbean political and economic reality in the context of globalisation. Identifies numerous features of the Caribbean reality that complicate the task of promoting and securing gender equity including the gap between ideological and material gender relations, divisions among women along class and racial/ethnic lines, and the male backlash. Examines the situation of women's participation in political decision-making in the CARICOM and identifies factors impeding women's advancement.

Caribbean feminism in transition: an interview with Professor V.E. Barriteau.
Abstract:
Presents the thoughts of Professor Barriteau on the progress of Caribbean women since the colonial times, their contribution to nationalist movements in the region, the current state of Caribbean feminism, and what the future holds for the movement. Barriteau highlights the transitional state of Caribbean women and discusses their ambiguous relationship with their 'mothers' and the overlapping public and private spheres of their lives. She also asserts the need for Caribbean feminism to balance activism with disciplinary studies as women's studies assume greater importance in academia.

Gender equality in the new millennium: goal or gimmick?.

Abstract:
Provides a critique of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) in comparison to the Beijing Platform for Action (BPA). Discusses the inadequacy of their targets and indicators, their omission of goals relating to violence against women and sexual and reproductive rights, and their silence on the context and institutional environment in which they are to be met. Discusses the specific MDGs that ought to be of primary concern for CARICOM women including poverty eradication and combating the spread of HIV/AIDS. Makes recommendations for the creation of linkages in the Caribbean between the MDGs and the BPA in the context of neoliberalism, religious fundamentalism and the male backlash.

Sex worker migration and human trafficking: problems and possibilities.

Abstract:
Discusses the connection between the trafficking of persons, and prostitution other types of sex work in the Caribbean context. Describes the main characteristics of migrant sex work in the region, asserting that migration into work within the sex trade in the region is part of Caribbean women's livelihood strategies, which are informed by historical patterns of work and survival in the region. Examines the problems and short-comings of anti-trafficking interventions, cautioning against the implementation of repressive legislation which deepen economic and social divides and increase hostilities. Makes policy recommendations that would allow Caribbean governments to design policies that would promote Caribbean sustainability and contribute to peaceful conditions in the region.

Women's political participation in the Dominican Republic: the case of the Mirabal sisters.
In: Caribbean Quarterly Mona: UWI, 2006, vol. 52 Nos. 3 & 4, pp. 172-183

Abstract:
Locates Hispanic women at the vanguard of popular resistance against dictatorship and military rule in Hispanic societies. Theorises that women as symbols of national resistance can become springboards for overcoming barriers to female participation in countries traditionally reticent to accept a feminist agenda. Provides a historical background of the Mirabel sisters, political activists of the Dominican Republic who were assassinated by the dictator Rafael Leonidas Trujillo. Discusses Trujillo's relationship to women in general and Minerva Mirabal in particular, and provides an overview of the Cuban Revolution and the 14th of June Movement. Assesses the impact of the Mirabal Sisters on women's participation in the Dominican Republic and their legacy today.

Ten years after Beijing: what more do Caribbean women want?.
In: Journal of Eastern Caribbean Studies Cave Hill: SALISES, vol. 31 no. 1, pp. 55-79
Abstract:
Observes the relative strides made by women in the ten years since the Fourth World Conference on Women, Beijing, and the backlash of men who feel threatened by women's ascendency and of women who believe that other women are exploiting the advantages gained through the efforts of others. Explores the goals of the women's movement against this background. Applies a gender analysis to three themes: what did women want in their quest for human rights, what women got as a result of strategic action, and what issues have emerged that form women's goals for the future. Concludes with a discussion of the four main areas of women's concern for the future: concern with self, concern with interpersonal relationships, especially between sexual partners, concern with societal institutions, and concern with society itself.

Translating narratives of masculinity across borders: a Jamaican case study.
Abstract:
Seeks to continue the discussion of black male vulnerability in Toronto, using the Canadian misreading of Jamaican male identities as a point of departure. Critically examines the North American construction of Jamaican identity as well as the assumptions of diasporic Jamaicans about what it means to be Jamaican. Examines the construction of Jamaican masculinity in Jamaican popular culture and explores the ways in which three Jamaican women writers living outside the nation - Joan Riley, Patricia Powell and Makeda Silvera - challenge popular constructions of Jamaican masculinity.

Abstract:
Presents a collection of practices taken in 15 countries worldwide that advance gendered resilience building, particularly as it relates to the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action. Describes the different roles played by women from disaster-prone communities, including constructing disaster resistant housing; increasing food security; disseminating information; upgrading livelihoods; and negotiating claims to rights and resources. Documents the impacts and results, lessons learned, challenges faced, and potential for replication of each initiative undertaken. Highlights the potential for disaster recovery and rehabilitation to provide opportunities for women to empower themselves and their communities, and asserts the need for a gender-balanced approach to disaster risk reduction.

Abstract:
Situates the study within the context of the worldwide AIDS pandemic which results in elevated levels of orphans and displaced children from high adult mortality. Briefly and selectively reviews the literature that assesses the impact of orphan status on schooling. Describes the datasets and defines the key variables, based on data gathered on 51 countries included on the basis of data availability. Presents findings on four questions: (1) How prevalent are orphans and with whom do they live? (2) Are orphans more likely to be poor? (3) Conditional on their economic status, are orphans less likely to be enrolled in school? (4) To the extent there is a gender gap, is it greater for orphans? Summarises the results and identifies some key policies and research issues.

Abstract:
Provides an overview of some of the important features of the current conjuncture which demonstrates the interconnectedness between the global and hemispheric trade regimes, the evolving CSME and the gendered realities of the people. Uses a 2003 UNDP study to illustrate some of the gender issues facing civil society in the CARICOM region. Presents a case study of Jamaica, outlining the nation's progress in gender-mainstreaming, discussing the lack of corresponding social and economic advancement for the majority of women, and suggesting possible reasons for this. Asserts the need for a gender approach to the crafting of the CSME. Discusses the work of civil society organisation and their challenges faced.

Abstract:
International migration has been a constant factor in the history of the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean. From colonization and independence to the mid-twentieth century, the region received overseas immigrants from Africa and Asia whose presence is particularly significant in a number of countries and has had a considerable influence on them. This trend's reversal by the current globalization process poses many challenges and opportunities.

Between respectability and self-respect: framing Afro-Caribbean women's labour history.
Abstract:
Explores the transitions, institutions and discourses that mediated Anglophone Afro-Caribbean women's labour experiences from the period of slavery to the 1990s, and considers the modes in which they have tended to assert themselves and respond to their circumstances. Examines how Afro-Caribbean women negotiated the race-, class-, and gender-stratified terrain of occupational hierarchy and economic livelihood, within a context of severe structural and ideological constraint. Studies the tensions between the requisites of Euro-creole and middle-class feminine respectability and the determined counter-assertions of sub-altern Afro-creole womanist self-respect.

asserting that migration into work within the sex trade in the region is part of Caribbean women's livelihood strategies, which are informed by historical patterns of work and survival in the region. Examines the problems and short-comings of anti-trafficking interventions, cautioning against the implementation of repressive legislation which deepen economic and social divides and increase hostilities. Makes policy recommendations that would allow Caribbean governments to design policies that would promote Caribbean sustainability and contribute to peaceful conditions in the region.

Human trafficking in the context of Caribbean labor migration.

Abstract:
Define trafficking as essentially the recruitment, movement and employment of persons conducted outside of the formal systems, which involves practices that are illegal. Outlines commonalities among the situations which may lead to persons’ involvement in trafficking. Evaluates trafficking within the context of migration, discussing the purpose, directions and methods of movement; activities, conditions, potential conflict and duration of stay at destinations; and the legal framework for trafficking. Discusses trafficking of persons within CARICOM in the context of CSME and makes police recommendations for the reduction of vulnerability to being trafficked and the punishment of perpetrators of trafficking.

Abstract:
International migration has been a constant factor in the history of the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean. From colonization and independence to the mid-twentieth century, the region received overseas immigrants from Africa and Asia whose presence is particularly significant in a number of countries and has had a considerable influence on them. This trend's reversal by the current globalization process poses many challenges and opportunities.

Scope and nature of the trafficking phenomenon: a regional perspective.

Abstract:

Presents and discusses four general characteristics of trafficking: recruitment, transportation, exploitation, and coercion and control. Distinguishes between trafficking in persons and smuggling. Provides a cross-country analysis of trafficking in seven Caribbean countries, outlining emerging regional trends relating to migration, methods of recruitment and movement, forms of exploitation, and counter-trafficking actions taken. Summarises several recommendations put forward by the International Organisation for Migration to address the common challenges faced by Caribbean countries as a result of human trafficking.

Abstract:
Examines the connections between gender, nutrition and poverty in the English-speaking Caribbean. Discusses the situation of poverty in the region and the limited progress made in addressing poverty within recent times. Presents the rationale for the application of a gender perspective to analyzing poverty. Examines the status of women in the region with respect to poverty, employment and their status in the household, and asserts the centrality of the empowerment of women to the elimination of poverty. Discusses the impact of gender differentials on the nutritional status of children, and provides an overview of recent trends in the region with regard to obesity, stunting, and undernourishment. Makes recommendations to governments and regional bodies for a gender analysis of public policies relative to poverty, food security and health.

Gender equality in the new millennium: goal or gimmick?.

Abstract:
Provides a critique of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) in comparison to the Beijing Platform for Action (BPA). Discusses the inadequacy of their targets and indicators, their omission of goals relating to violence against women and sexual and reproductive rights, and their silence on the context and institutional environment in which they are to be met. Discusses the specific MDGs that ought to be of primary concern for CARICOM women including poverty eradication and combating the spread of HIV/AIDS. Makes recommendations for the creation of linkages in the Caribbean between the MDGs and the BPA in the context of neoliberalism, religious fundamentalism and the male backlash.

Abstract:
Situates the study within the context of the worldwide AIDS pandemic which results in elevated levels of orphans and displaced children from high adult mortality. Briefly and selectively reviews the literature that assesses the impact of orphan status on schooling. Describes the datasets and defines the key variables, based on data gathered on 51 countries included on the basis of data availability. Presents findings on four questions: (1) How prevalent are orphans and with whom do they live? (2) Are orphans more likely to be poor? (3) Conditional on their economic status, are orphans less likely to be enrolled in school? (4) To the extent there is a gender gap, is it greater for orphans? Summarises the results and identifies some key policies and research issues.

Abstract:

Presents a collection of practices taken in 15 countries worldwide that advance gendered resilience building, particularly as it relates to the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action. Describes the different roles played by women from disaster-prone communities, including constructing disaster resistant housing; increasing food security; disseminating information; upgrading livelihoods; and negotiating claims to rights and resources. Documents the impacts and results, lessons learned, challenges faced, and potential for replication of each initiative undertaken. Highlights the potential for disaster recovery and rehabilitation to provide opportunities for women to empower themselves and their communities, and asserts the needs for a gender-balanced approach to disaster risk reduction.

LC/G.2303(SES.31/11).

Abstract:

International migration has been a constant factor in the history of the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean. From colonization and independence to the mid-twentieth century, the region received overseas immigrants from Africa and Asia whose presence is particularly significant in a number of countries and has had a considerable influence on them. This trend's reversal by the current globalization process poses many challenges and opportunities.

Abstract:
Provides a brief overview of recent economic trends as well as a synopsis of the demographic dynamics in the region. Attempts to measure poverty levels based on available data. Outlines the consequences of increased life expectancy and longevity on the demographic structure and discusses the interdependence with the labour market and labour supply. Assesses the degree to which Caribbean countries have recognised these transformations and reflected these changing needs in their social planning strategies and protection polices. Seeks to identify those groups most at risk and makes recommendations for policy changes to government and regional policy and programme planning bodies.

Abstract:
Examines the connections between gender, nutrition and poverty in the English-speaking Caribbean. Discusses the situation of poverty in the region and the limited progress made in addressing poverty within recent times. Presents the rationale for the application of a gender perspective to analyzing poverty. Examines the status of women in the region with respect to poverty, employment and their status in the household, and asserts the centrality of the empowerment of women to the elimination of poverty. Discusses the impact of gender differentials on the nutritional status of children, and provides an overview of recent trends in the region with regard to obesity, stunting and undernourishment. Makes recommendations to governments and regional bodies for a gender analysis of public policies relative to poverty, food security and health.
